Amedeo Modigliani was an Italian artist who lived and worked in Paris during the early 20th century. He is best known for his portraits and nudes, which are characterized by their elongated, stylized forms and muted colors.

Modigliani was born in Livorno, Italy, in 1884. He studied art in Florence and Venice before moving to Paris in 1906. In Paris, he became associated with a group of artists known as the Ecole de Paris, which included Pablo Picasso, Georges Braque, and Juan Gris. Modigliani's work was influenced by both expressionism and cubism, but he developed his own unique style that is instantly recognizable.

Modigliani's paintings are often characterized by their melancholic mood and their sense of detachment. His subjects are often depicted with elongated, stylized bodies and vacant expressions. Modigliani's use of muted colors and simplified forms creates a sense of timeless beauty and mystery.

Modigliani died in Paris in 1920, at the age of 35. He was a prolific artist, producing over 1,000 paintings and drawings during his short career. His work is now considered to be among the most important and influential of the early 20th century.
