Arslan's father was a survivor of the Armenian Genocide, and she grew up hearing stories about the atrocities that had been committed against his people. These stories had a profound impact on Arslan, and she has spent her life working to raise awareness of the Armenian Genocide and its victims.

The Book

Goodbye Antoura is a fictionalized account of the Armenian Genocide, based on the stories that Arslan heard from her father and other survivors. The book tells the story of Arslan's grandmother, Satenig, who was a young woman living in Antoura when the genocide began.

Satenig witnesses the horrors of the genocide firsthand, and she is forced to flee her home and her country. She travels to Italy, where she eventually marries and has a family. However, Satenig never forgets the horrors that she has witnessed, and she spends her life telling her story to her children and grandchildren.
