Kushner, a real estate developer, was appointed senior advisor to the president. He played a key role in developing the administration's policies on everything from trade to immigration. Ivanka, a fashion designer, was appointed advisor to the president. She focused on issues such as women's empowerment and workforce development.

From the beginning, there were questions about whether Kushner and Ivanka were qualified for their positions. They had no prior government experience, and they were both seen as close confidants of President Trump. Critics accused them of using their positions to enrich themselves and their family.

In 2017, Kushner was investigated for his ties to Russia. He met with Russian officials during the 2016 presidential campaign, and he failed to disclose those meetings on his security clearance form. Kushner was also criticized for his business dealings, which included a failed attempt to secure financing from a Chinese bank.

Ivanka was also investigated for her business dealings. She was accused of using her position in the White House to promote her fashion line. She was also criticized for her use of a private email account for government business.

In 2020, Kushner and Ivanka left the White House. They have since returned to their private lives, but they remain under investigation for their alleged involvement in political corruption. Their story is a cautionary tale about the dangers of greed, ambition, and power.
