In a time when trust in government is at an all-time low, the Jump on the Bus campaign offers a glimmer of hope for the future of American democracy. Founded in 2016 by a group of concerned citizens, the campaign aims to re-energize the political system by empowering ordinary citizens to run for office and win.

The campaign's name is a reference to the iconic 1960s song by the folk group Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young. The song's lyrics call for people to come together and work for a better world. The Jump on the Bus campaign has adopted this message as its own, believing that it is time for a new generation of leaders to step up and make democracy work again.

The Jump on the Bus Model

The Jump on the Bus model is based on the idea that anyone can run for office, regardless of their background or experience. The campaign provides candidates with the training, resources, and support they need to run a successful race. This includes everything from fundraising to campaign strategy to media relations.

The goal of the campaign is to elect candidates who are committed to working for the common good. These candidates are not beholden to special interests or political parties. They are everyday people who want to make a difference in their communities.

The Impact of Jump on the Bus

The Jump on the Bus campaign has already had a significant impact on American politics. In the 2018 midterm elections, the campaign helped to elect over 100 candidates to office. These candidates are making a difference in their communities, working on issues such as healthcare, education, and climate change.

The success of the Jump on the Bus campaign has inspired similar efforts around the country. In 2019, the campaign launched a national network of affiliates. These affiliates are working to recruit and support candidates in their own communities.
