People with diabetes face a number of challenges, including discrimination. Discrimination against people with diabetes is a form of ableism, which is a system of oppression that values people with disabilities as less than people without disabilities.

This article will explore the different forms of diabetes discrimination, the impact of diabetes discrimination on people with diabetes, and the ways to combat diabetes discrimination.

Forms of Diabetes Discrimination

Diabetes discrimination can take many forms, including:

- Denial of employment: People with diabetes may be denied employment because of their condition.
- Denial of promotions: People with diabetes may be denied promotions because of their condition.
- Lower pay: People with diabetes may be paid less than people without diabetes for the same work.
- Harassment: People with diabetes may be harassed by their coworkers or supervisors because of their condition.
- Exclusion from social activities: People with diabetes may be excluded from social activities because of their condition.

Diabetes discrimination can have a devastating impact on people with diabetes. It can lead to unemployment, poverty, and social isolation.

Impact of Diabetes Discrimination

Diabetes discrimination can have a number of negative consequences for people with diabetes, including:

- Increased risk of diabetes complications: Diabetes discrimination can lead to increased risk of diabetes complications, such as heart disease, stroke, kidney disease, and blindness.
- Decreased quality of life: Diabetes discrimination can lead to decreased quality of life for people with diabetes.

- Increased risk of depression and anxiety: Diabetes discrimination can lead to increased risk of depression and anxiety for people with diabetes.

Diabetes discrimination is a serious problem that needs to be addressed. There are a number of things that can be done to combat diabetes discrimination, including:

Combating Diabetes Discrimination

- Educate the public about diabetes: The public needs to be educated about diabetes so that they can understand the condition and its impact on people with diabetes.
- Enact anti-discrimination laws: Anti-discrimination laws need to be enacted to protect people with diabetes from discrimination.
- Provide support for people with diabetes: People with diabetes need to be provided with support so that they can live full and productive lives.

Diabetes discrimination is a serious problem, but it is one that can be overcome. By working together, we can create a more just and equitable world for people with diabetes.
