Knock at the Door is a taut psychological thriller that follows a family as they are terrorized by a group of strangers who claim to be prophets. As the family tries to escape, they must confront their own fears and the darkness that lurks within their home.

The film opens with a young girl named Wen (Kristen Cui) playing in the woods behind her home. She comes across a group of four strangers who claim to be prophets. The strangers tell Wen that the world is going to end and that she must help them save humanity.

Wen's parents, Eric (Jonathan Groff) and Andrew (Ben Aldridge), are skeptical of the strangers' claims. However, as the day progresses, strange things start to happen. The power goes out, the phone lines are cut, and the family is surrounded by the strangers.

As the family tries to escape, they are confronted by the strangers' increasingly violent behavior. The strangers claim that they are acting on God's orders and that they must sacrifice one of the family members in order to save the world.

Eric and Andrew must now make a choice: sacrifice one of their own or risk the end of the world. The film builds to a suspenseful climax that will leave you on the edge of your seat.
