Early Life

Ralph Moody's father, John, was born in Missouri in 1850. He grew up on a farm and learned the value of hard work at a young age. When he was 19 years old, John moved to Colorado to seek his fortune in the gold rush. He didn't find gold, but he did find work as a cowboy.

John was a natural cowboy. He was a skilled rider and roper, and he was always willing to work hard. He quickly rose through the ranks and became a foreman on a large cattle ranch. In 1876, John married Mary Jane Ward, and they had six children together.

Life on the Ranch

The Moody family lived on a ranch in Colorado. John worked long hours, but he always made time for his family. He taught his children the importance of hard work, independence, and family. He also taught them how to ride horses, rope cattle, and work the land.

Life on the ranch was not easy. The Moodys lived in a small house with no electricity or running water. They had to work hard to make a living, but they were always happy to be together.

Ralph's Father

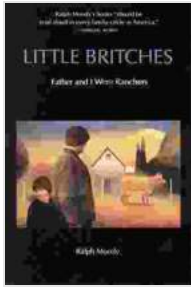

Ralph Moody's father was a strong and independent man. He was always willing to work hard, and he never gave up on his dreams. He was also a loving and supportive father. He taught his children the importance of family, and he always made sure that they knew that he loved them.

Ralph Moody's father died in 1930, but his legacy lives on. His stories about life on the ranch are full of humor, adventure, and wisdom. They are a reminder of the values that made America great.
