After graduating from the prestigious Lycée Condorcet in Paris, Lucie enrolled in the École Normale Supérieure, where she studied history and philosophy. It was here that she met Raymond Aubrac, a fellow student who shared her passion for social causes. They eventually fell in love and married in 1939.

As the war clouds gathered over Europe, Lucie and Raymond joined the French Communist Party and became involved in anti-Nazi activities. They distributed leaflets, organized underground networks, and provided support to Jewish refugees. Their unwavering commitment to the fight against fascism would soon lead them into the perilous realm of the Gestapo.

Capture and Interrogation

In June 1943, Lucie and Raymond were arrested by the Gestapo. They were separated and subjected to brutal interrogations, but both refused to betray their comrades or divulge any secrets.

Lucie's resilience and quick wit made her a formidable opponent for her captors. She feigned illness to gain access to medical care and used the opportunity to pass coded messages to the outside world. She also managed to sabotage the Gestapo's interrogation techniques by confusing her interrogators with false information and misleading statements.

Daring Escape

After months of imprisonment, Lucie was scheduled to be transferred to a concentration camp in Germany. Determined to escape, she enlisted the help of fellow inmate and resistance member Violette Szabo. Together, they devised a daring plan.

On October 27, 1943, as Lucie was being transported to the Lyon railway station, Violette created a diversion by feigning an escape attempt. In the ensuing chaos, Lucie seized the opportunity to bolt into the bustling crowds.

With the help of trusted contacts, Lucie made her way to Switzerland, where she reunited with Raymond and continued her fight against the Nazis.
