Kelly was born in Chicago in 1889 to Irish immigrant parents. He grew up in poverty and witnessed firsthand the struggles of working-class families. He began his career as a labor organizer in the early 1900s, and he quickly rose through the ranks of the labor movement. He became president of the Illinois Federation of Labor in 1917, and he served in that position for 25 years.

As president of the Illinois Federation of Labor, Kelly led the fight for a number of important labor reforms, including the eight-hour workday, the minimum wage, and workers' compensation. He also worked to improve the working conditions of women and children.

Kelly was a strong supporter of the civil rights movement. He marched with Martin Luther King Jr. in Selma, Alabama, and he helped to organize the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom. He also worked to end discrimination in housing, employment, and education.

Kelly was also a leading advocate for immigration rights. He helped to found the American Immigration Council, and he served as its president for many years. He worked to reform the immigration laws and to protect the rights of immigrants.

In addition to his work in the labor movement, the civil rights movement, and the immigration rights movement, Kelly also worked to improve education, healthcare, and housing for all Americans. He was a strong supporter of public education, and he helped to establish the University of Illinois at Chicago. He also worked to expand access to healthcare and housing for low-income families.

Kelly was a tireless advocate for social justice throughout his life. He was a man of great passion and conviction, and he never wavered in his commitment to fighting for the rights of the poor and oppressed. He left a lasting legacy of social justice advocacy, and his work continues to inspire activists today.
