

The Continental Army and American Union Campaigns: A Comprehensive Overview of the Canadian Regiment's Role

Formation

The Canadian Regiment was formed in 1775 by Colonel Moses Hazen, a Canadian-born officer who had served in the British Army. Hazen was a strong supporter of the American Revolution, and he believed that the Canadians would be willing to fight for their independence from Great Britain. He traveled to Montreal and Quebec, where he recruited volunteers for his regiment. The regiment was made up of both American and Canadian volunteers, and it quickly grew to over 500 men.
