The Bessborough Hotel was once one of the grandest hotels in Dublin. It was built in the late 1800s and quickly became a popular destination for wealthy travelers and celebrities. However, the hotel fell into disrepair in the mid-20th century and became a magnet for crime. In the 1980s, the hotel was closed and boarded up.

In the early 2000s, a group of volunteers came together to save the Bessborough Hotel. They formed the Bessborough Revival Group and began to raise money to restore the hotel. The group's efforts were successful, and the hotel was reopened in 2007.

The restoration of the Bessborough Hotel is a story of hope and renewal. It is a reminder that even the most dilapidated buildings can be brought back to life with the help of dedicated people.

The Grand Old Dame of Dublin

The Bessborough Hotel is located in the heart of Dublin, on the corner of O'Connell Street and Parnell Street. It is a large, imposing building with a classical facade. The hotel's interior is equally impressive, with a grand staircase, a marble-floored lobby, and a ballroom that can accommodate up to 500 guests.

The Bessborough Hotel was built in 1899 by the Great Southern and Western Railway Company. ## The Bessborough Revival Group

In the early 2000s, a group of volunteers came together to save the Bessborough Hotel. The group was led by Pat Liddy, a former Dublin City Councilor. Liddy had a vision for the hotel, and he believed that it could be restored to its former glory.

The Bessborough Revival Group began by raising money to restore the hotel. The group held fundraising events and appealed to the public for donations. The group also received support from the Dublin City Council and the Irish government.

The restoration of the Bessborough Hotel was a complex and challenging project. The hotel's exterior had to be cleaned and repaired, and its interior had to be completely renovated. The group also had to find a new operator for the hotel.

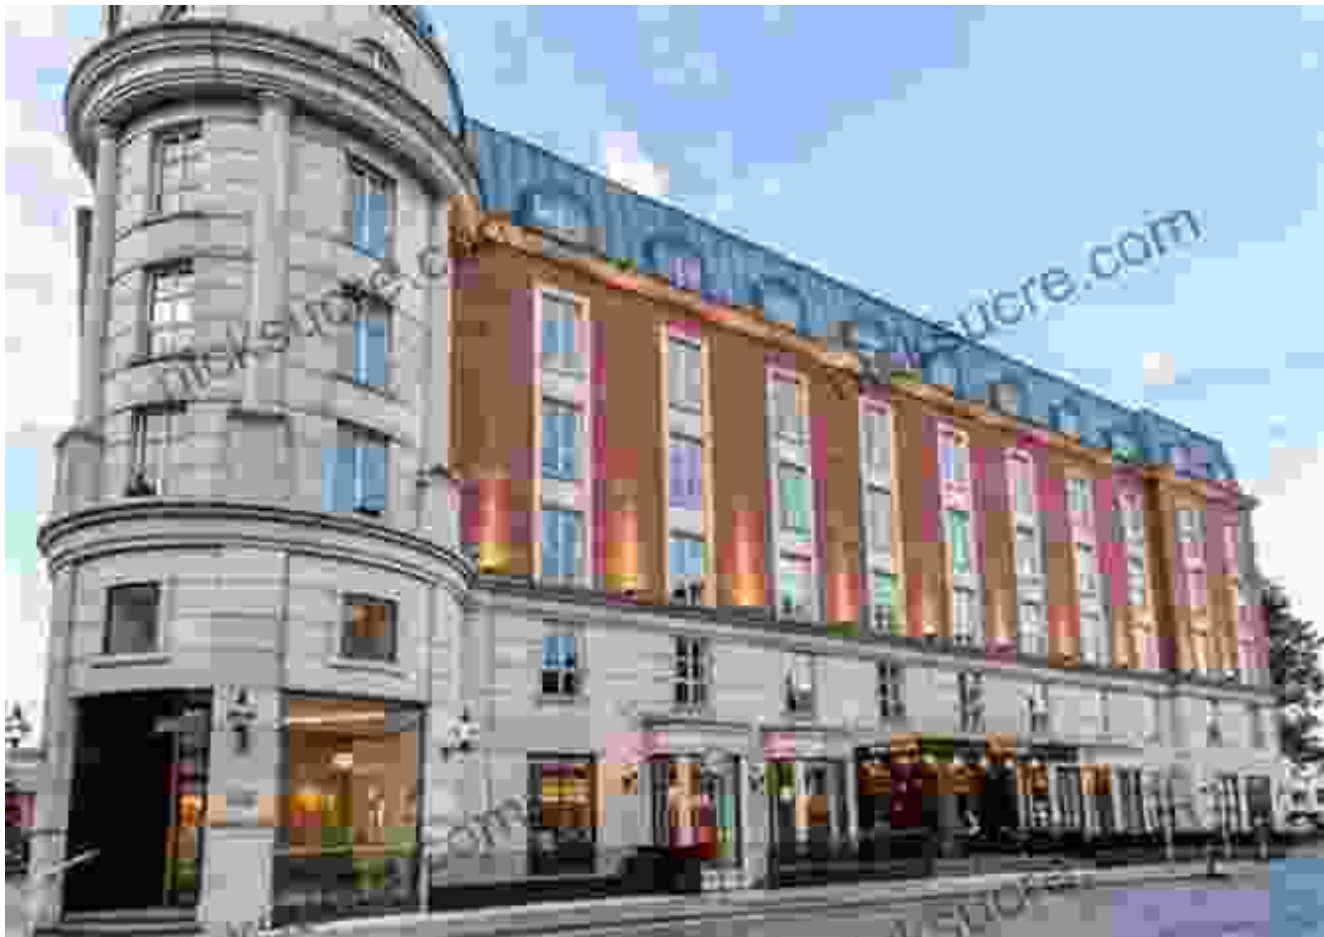

Despite the challenges, the Bessborough Revival Group was successful in its mission. The hotel was reopened in 2007, and it is now once again one of the most popular hotels in Dublin.
