Emilie Schenkl: A Spirited Austrian Woman

Emilie Schenkl was born in Austria in 1896. A bright and independent-minded woman, she broke societal norms by pursuing higher education, studying languages and literature at the University of Vienna.

Emilie's adventurous spirit led her to travel extensively, including a trip to India in 1934. It was there that she first encountered Subhas Chandra Bose, a charismatic Indian nationalist leader.

Subhas Chandra Bose: India's "Tiger"

Subhas Chandra Bose was one of the most prominent figures in India's struggle for independence from British rule. Known as the "Tiger of Bengal," he was a fearless revolutionary who advocated for armed resistance against the British.

Bose was a deeply patriotic man, but he also held a profound belief in the power of love and friendship. His interactions with Emilie revealed a softer side beneath his strong exterior.

An Unlikely Encounter

The paths of Emilie and Bose crossed at a dinner party in Vienna in 1934. Despite their different backgrounds and political affiliations, they were immediately drawn to each other's intelligence and passion.

Forbidden Love Amidst War

Their love affair blossomed amidst the turmoil of World War II. Bose was forced to go into exile, traveling to Germany and Japan to seek support for India's independence movement.

Despite the distance, Emilie and Bose remained committed to each other. They exchanged countless letters, keeping the flame of their love alive in the face of adversity.

However, their relationship was not without its challenges. Bose's political activities and his association with Axis powers during the war put Emilie at risk. She was subjected to surveillance and interrogation by the Gestapo.

A Daughter's Legacy

In 1942, Emilie gave birth to their daughter, Anita Pfaff. Anita became a symbol of their enduring love and the enduring legacy of her parents' struggle.
