Gilbert is known for his outspoken views on the financial industry. He has been a vocal critic of excessive risk-taking and has called for greater transparency and accountability in the investment management industry.

Gilbert is also a strong advocate for shareholder value. He believes that companies should be run in the best interests of their shareholders, and he has been a vocal critic of short-termism in the financial markets.

Gilbert's success in the financial industry has made him a wealthy man. He is estimated to be worth over £1 billion. However, he has not forgotten his roots. He is a generous philanthropist, and he has donated millions of pounds to charities that support education, healthcare, and the arts.

Early life and career

Martin Gilbert was born in London in 1956. He studied history at the University of Cambridge, and after graduating he worked as a stockbroker.

In 1983, Gilbert co-founded Aberdeen Asset Management with two friends. The company initially focused on investing in small and medium-sized companies. However, over time it expanded its range of investments to include a wide range of asset classes.

Gilbert's leadership was instrumental in Aberdeen's success. He was a strong advocate for active management, and he believed that the company could generate superior returns for its clients by investing in undervalued companies.

Aberdeen's growth

Under Gilbert's leadership, Aberdeen's assets under management grew from a few million pounds to over £300 billion. The company also expanded its global presence, opening offices in major financial centers around the world.

Aberdeen's success was due in part to Gilbert's investment philosophy. He believed that companies should be valued on the basis of their long-term cash flows, and he was willing to invest in companies that were out of favor with other investors.

Gilbert was also a strong advocate for shareholder value. He believed that companies should be run in the best interests of their shareholders, and he was a vocal critic of short-termism in the financial markets.

Gilbert's legacy

Martin Gilbert stepped down as chief executive of Aberdeen Asset Management in 2017. However, he remains a major shareholder in the company, and he continues to play an active role in its management.

Gilbert's legacy is one of success and innovation. He is widely recognized as one of the most successful investment managers of his generation. He has also been a vocal advocate for shareholder value and for greater transparency and accountability in the financial industry.

Martin Gilbert is a complex and fascinating figure. He is a brilliant investor, a successful businessman, and a generous philanthropist. He has also been a vocal critic of the financial industry, and he has called for greater transparency and accountability.
